SUPPORTING SUSTAINABLY SOURCED COCOA

When John Cadbury opened his first store in 1824, he believed chocolate could be a force for good — a treat made with care, and a business built on kindness.

But this generous spirit didn't stop there. When Cadbury Dairy Milk was first made in 1906 it was produced not just with a glass but a generous glass & a half of fresh milk - and still is today. We endeavour to live up to these founding principles of generosity in everything we do. That's why our Cadbury Dairy Milk cocoa is sourced through our signature more sustainable cocoa sourcing program, Cocoa Life.

Cocoa Life has been running since 2011 and touches many aspects of life for communities in cocoa regions - from farming techniques, to looking after the environment and supporting the local economy.

All this is done through working together with local people, so that everything happens in a way that is right for the area and can continue for years and decades to come.

This means that of the cocoa used across all Cadbury chocolate made in Australia, it is sourced more sustainably through the Cocoa Life program, and in future, we're aiming to be able to say the same for all Cadbury products.
